Computer-generated evidence is always suspect because of the ease with which it can be altered, usually without a trace.

- A. True
- B. False

Computer-generated evidence must be validated before being used in court. Forensic experts employ:

NEW QUESTION # 110

What technique can be used to track cryptocurrency transactions in cybercrime investigations?

- A. Phishing attacks
- B. Reverse IP lookup
- C. Blockchain analysis
- D. Dark web forums

Answer: C

Explanation:

Comprehensive and Detailed In-Depth Explanation: Blockchain analysis helps track cryptocurrency transactions by:

* Following transaction history using blockchain explorers (e.g., Bitcoin, Ethereum).

* Identifying wallets and linking them to known entities.

* Detecting laundering patterns used in illicit activities (e.g., mixing services).

While dark web forums and phishing are methods used to obtain private keys, blockchain analysis is a forensically sound technique used by law enforcement.

NEW QUESTION # 111

How is a privacy policy used in social networks?

- A. All of the above
- B. To protect members' information
- C. To set guidelines on how information will be shared

Answer: A

Explanation:

Social media platforms are legally required to publish privacy policies that explain:

How they protect user information from breaches and unauthorized access.

The guidelines for data sharing with third parties, advertisers, and governments.

What security measures are in place (e.g., encryption, multi-factor authentication).

Despite privacy policies, many platforms have been criticized for violating privacy rights through:

Unlawful data collection and sale (e.g., Facebook-Cambridge Analytica scandal).

Failing to notify users about security breaches.

Tracking user activity even after logging out.

Thus, while privacy policies exist to protect users, they often favor corporate interests over privacy rights.
