NEW QUESTION # 93

A company plans to meet new regulatory requirements.

The regulator has issued new tax tiers.

You need to update the base application table by using a table extension.

Which table field property can you change?

- A. BlankZero
- B. DecimalPlaces
- C. AutoFormatType
- D. CalcFormula

Answer: A

Explanation:

When updating the base application table using a table extension in Microsoft Dynamics 365 Business Central, certain properties of table fields can be modified to meet new requirements, such as regulatory changes. The DecimalPlaces property (B) is one such property that can be adjusted in a table extension. This property determines the number of decimal places that are displayed and stored for decimal fields in the table.

Adjusting the DecimalPlaces property can be particularly useful when dealing with financial data and tax calculations that require precision to meet new tax tiers set by a regulator. It's important to note that not all properties can be modified in a table extension; for example, the CalcFormula property (A) cannot be changed as it affects how the field's value is calculated, which could have significant implications on the base application's logic.
