A team member informs the project manager that a local university has recently published a research journal on the same material.

Where should the project manager find this information?

- A. Industrial studies
- B. Organizational process assets (OPAs)
- C. Enterprise environmental factors (EEFs)
- D. Commercial risk databases

Answer: C

Explanation:

Explanation

Enterprise environmental factors (EEFs) are conditions or circumstances that are not under the control of the project team, but may influence, constrain, or direct the project. EEFs include internal and external factors, such as organizational culture, market conditions, industry standards, government regulations, and academic research. In this case, the project manager should find the information about the new material from the research journal published by the local university, which is an example of an external EEF. This information may help the project manager to identify and analyze the risks associated with the new material and plan appropriate risk responses. Industrial studies, commercial risk databases, and organizational process assets (OPAs) are not the correct choices, as they are not relevant to the question. Industrial studies are systematic investigations of a specific industry or sector, which may provide general information about the market trends, opportunities, and challenges, but not specific information about the new material. Commercial risk databases are sources of information about historical or potential risks that may affect projects in different domains or regions, which may help the project manager to identify common or emerging risks, but not the risks related to the new material. OPAs are the plans, processes, policies, procedures, and knowledge bases specific to and used by the performing organization, which may help the project manager to follow the established guidelines and practices for risk management, but not to obtain new information about the new material.
