- B. Avaya Aura Communication Manager (CM) using SIP
- C. Avaya Aura Session Manager (SM) using SIP

Answer: A

Explanation:

Application Enablement Services (AES) acts as the primary middleware bridge between the telephony environment and external business applications (such as CTI, screen pop, or reporting tools).

Communication with CM: Historically and architecturally, AES communicates with Communication Manager primarily using H.323 protocols via the TSAPI (Telephony Services Application Programming Interface) and CVLAN services.

The Link: The connection between AES and CM is established through an IP-based link where CM acts as the telephony server, providing call-state information and control commands to AES, which then translates them into usable data for developers or third-party applications.
