EXIN EPI Certified Data Centre Specialist Sample Questions (Q13-Q18):

NEW QUESTION # 13

Do you need to consider blast protection when designing a data center?

- A. No, there is no reason for implementing blast protection as nobody can predict the impact of a bomb explosion.
- B. No, blast protection is not a requirement of ANSI/TIA-942.
- C. Yes, if the data center is a potential target or the building is located within the vicinity of (close by) a potential target.
- D. Yes, blast protection is a requirement of ANSI/TIA-942.

Answer: C

Explanation:

Blast protection should be considered if the data center or its location is a potential target or is near high-risk areas. Blast protection measures can protect both personnel and infrastructure from potential explosion impacts, which could be essential in areas with heightened security risks.

Detailed Explanation:

In areas where there may be risks of terrorist attacks or explosions due to nearby high-risk facilities, implementing blast protection measures helps safeguard the data center's infrastructure. These measures can include reinforced walls, blast-resistant windows, and secure entryways designed to withstand explosive forces.

EPI Data Center Specialist References:

While not specifically mandated by ANSI/TIA-942, EPI training advises considering local risk factors, including proximity to potential targets, when evaluating the need for blast protection. This approach is aligned with risk assessment and mitigation practices to ensure facility security.

NEW QUESTION # 14

What is the first step in the design stage of the data center life cycle?

- A. Select vendors
- B. Define the scope of the project
- C. Freeze the design
- D. Do a design validation

Answer: B

Explanation:

The life cycle begins with planning and design. The very first step is to clearly define the project scope: business requirements, capacity, availability targets, compliance standards, and budget. Without scope definition, design validation or vendor selection would be premature.

* Vendor selection (A) happens much later during procurement.

* Validation (B) occurs after conceptual and detailed designs are prepared.

* Freezing design (D) is the final stage before implementation.

Therefore, defining the project scope is the correct initial step.

References: ANSI/TIA-942-B Annex F (Lifecycle), ISO/IEC 30182 (Smart City & DC Lifecycle), PMI PMBOK (Scope Definition).

NEW QUESTION # 15

The data center has been in operation for about 1 year and 2 months. The dust levels in the computer room are relatively high. What is the most likely root cause?

- A. Every computer room has high dust levels due to constant high-speed air movement
- B. Low pressure in the computer room
- C. The cleaning crew is not doing their work properly
- D. Floorboards are most likely not fitted correctly

Answer: D

Explanation:

High dust levels in a computer room are often due to improperly fitted floorboards. When floorboards are not securely installed or do not fit tightly, they allow dust and particles from the subfloor to enter the room. In a data center, this can lead to high levels of dust that affect air quality and equipment performance.

Detailed Explanation:

Raised floors in data centers can accumulate dust and debris, especially if the floorboards are not properly sealed. Loose or improperly fitted floorboards allow contaminants from the subfloor to enter the data center environment, increasing the dust levels over time. Proper installation and maintenance of floor panels are essential to prevent dust infiltration and maintain clean conditions.

EPI Data Center Specialist References:

EPI training emphasizes proper flooring installation and maintenance to control air quality within data centers. Correctly fitted floorboards prevent dust accumulation from the subfloor, which helps protect sensitive equipment and maintains a cleaner environment.

NEW QUESTION # 16

What indicates the breaking capacity of a fuse or breaker?

- A. The current that a fuse or breaker is able to interrupt without being destroyed or causing an electric damaging arc.
- B. Mechanical strength of the casing of a fuse or breaker.
- C. The maximum voltage, in case of an electrical surge, that the fuse or breaker can handle without being destroyed or causing an electric damaging arc.
- D. The current at which the device will trip.

Answer: A

Explanation:

The breaking capacity of a fuse or breaker indicates the maximum current it can safely interrupt without being damaged or creating a dangerous arc. This value is crucial for ensuring that the device can handle fault conditions and prevent equipment damage or fire risks due to excessive current flow.

Detailed Explanation:

The breaking capacity, also known as the interrupting rating, ensures that the fuse or breaker can safely handle fault currents up to a specified limit. Exceeding this capacity could result in the device failing to interrupt the current, potentially causing hazardous conditions like electrical arcs.

EPI Data Center Specialist References:

EPI training underscores the importance of matching fuses and breakers with appropriate breaking capacities for the anticipated fault levels in data centers to ensure reliable and safe operation.

NEW QUESTION # 17

Which standard defines the requirements for network administration?

- A. ASHRAE
- B. ANSI/TIA-606
- C. ANSI/TIA-568
- D. ISO/IEC 30129

Answer: B

Explanation:

Network administration in structured cabling is governed by ANSI/TIA-606-B, which defines requirements for cable and asset administration, labeling, documentation, and record-keeping. It specifies how pathways, spaces, and cabling should be identified and labeled to ensure proper lifecycle management.

* ANSI/TIA-568 covers cabling performance standards, not administration.

* ISO/IEC 30129 relates to data center facilities and infrastructure but not cable management.

* ASHRAE focuses on thermal management, not cabling.

Proper administration is critical in data centers because high cable density can lead to operational issues, troubleshooting delays, and risk of downtime if poorly managed. By enforcing labeling schemes, color codes, and database-driven records, ANSI/TIA-606 supports operational excellence and compliance with ANSI/TIA-942.

References: ANSI/TIA-606-B (Administration Standard for Telecommunications Infrastructure), ANSI/TIA-942-B §8.6.
