NEW QUESTION # 391

Benchmarking a firm's performance against industry competitors is most valuable because it can reveal:

- A. that no further improvement is possible.
- B. a competitor's manufacturing processes.
- C. which processes require improvement.
- D. a firm's leadership ranking relative to industry peers.

Answer: C

Explanation:

Benchmarking a firm's performance against industry competitors is valuable because it can reveal which processes require improvement. By comparing key performance indicators (KPIs) with industry standards and best practices, firms can identify gaps in their operations and prioritize areas needing enhancement. This process-driven approach helps companies focus on specific improvements to gain competitive advantages.

* A competitor's manufacturing processes may not be fully disclosed or comparable.

* A firm's leadership ranking relative to industry peers provides insight but does not specify improvement areas.

* That no further improvement is possible is unrealistic, as continuous improvement is a key principle in operations management.

- B. the global reporting initiative e (GRI).
- C. recycling.
- D. rework.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Life Cycle Assessment (LCA) is a methodology used to assess the environmental impacts associated with all the stages of a product's life, from raw material extraction through to processing, manufacturing, distribution, use, and disposal or recycling. When a manufacturing process replaces a raw material with an alternative that reduces emissions, it is applying principles of LCA. This approach helps in understanding the overall environmental footprint of a product and finding opportunities to reduce negative impacts, such as emissions, by evaluating alternative materials and processes.
