NEW QUESTION # 102

During a team meeting, the team discuss a technique where real or perceived benefits to the customer, direct costs and opportunity costs are assessed. Which technique are they discussing?

- A. Kano Analysis
- B. Value Modeling
- C. Minimum Viable Product
- D. Impact Mapping

Answer: B

Explanation:

Explanation

Value Modelling models value creation for stakeholders who use the solution. Value Modelling is also referred to as Customer Value Model. Value Modelling follows a basic structure: Customer value = Benefits - Cost Benefits can be real (solves a problem or completes a job) or perceived (increases status, reputation, likability).

NEW QUESTION # 103

At the strategy level, avoid waste implies:

- A. Resources are overlapped to ensure vacation coverage to avoid delays
- B. Processes are in place for collaboration and continuous improvement
- C. Initiatives are duplicated where needed to ensure full coverage
- D. Good information must be made available for decision making

Answer: D

Explanation:

At the Strategy Horizon, the principle of Avoid Waste is primarily focused on the quality of decision-making. In a strategic context, waste is often generated when the organization invests in the wrong initiatives due to poor, incomplete, or outdated information. By ensuring that accurate, timely, and relevant information is made available to decision-makers, the organization can avoid the massive waste of resources associated with pursuing goals that do not align with market needs or organizational capabilities. This high-level application of the principle ensures that the "right" problems are being solved before the delivery teams begin their work. Effective information management at this horizon allows the enterprise to pivot early and allocate its limited resources to the most valuable opportunities, embodying the core agile value of efficiency and value-maximization.

NEW QUESTION # 104

The team is very busy working on a top priority initiative. They have delivered many user stories and have many left to complete. However the components they are delivering are not yet delivering end-to-end business value. How can the team maintain understanding of the big picture without getting lost in the details?

- A. Fully elaborate user stories
- B. Refine their backlog
- C. Create a story map

- D. Create a gantt chart

Answer: C

NEW QUESTION # 105

At the initiative level, the team decides work to develop additional solution functionality will continue as long as:

- A. Currently built components deliver the desired outcomes and sufficient value
- B. The team can find additional solution components to build
- C. Management is willing to release funds for the effort
- D. The initiative budget hasn ' t been completely used

Answer: A

Explanation:

At the Initiative Horizon , the decision to continue developing additional functionality is based on the ongoing delivery of value and outcomes , rather than budget consumption or a fixed schedule . Agile analysis focuses on satisfying the underlying business need. As long as the components being delivered continue to provide sufficient value and move the organization closer to its desired outcome, the work remains viable. However, the moment the team discovers that the need has been met or that further increments will not yield meaningful additional value, the work should be stopped to avoid waste . This outcome-based approach ensures that the organization does not " over-build " a solution and that resources are always directed toward the most impactful goals, allowing the team to pivot to new initiatives as soon as the current ones satisfy their success criteria.
