NEW QUESTION # 438

At the retrospective, the burndown chart shows that the project is slightly behind schedule. The project team identifies an inexperienced software engineer as the source of reduced velocity.

How should the project team address this issue?

- A. Assign less complex user stories to the inexperienced software engineer at the next iteration planning meeting.
- B. Suggest pair programming during the retrospective.
- C. Ask the product owner to re-prioritize the user stories at the next retrospective.
- D. Re-estimate the story points with team members at the next iteration planning meeting.

Answer: B

NEW QUESTION # 439

What should the project team do next?

- A. Estimate the project team's capacity.
- B. Calculate how much work will fit into the next iteration.
- C. Determine how much work can be delivered.
- D. Estimate items in the product backlog.

Answer: D

Explanation:

Once scope and acceptance criteria are known, the next step is to estimate the size and effort of backlog items, which enables planning. The PMI Agile Practice Guide (Section 5.2: Backlog Estimation) and Mike Griffiths' PMI-ACP Exam Prep Book (Chapter 6: Adaptive Planning) recommend using estimation techniques (e.g., story points, T-shirt sizing) to determine the relative effort of each backlog item before performing release or sprint planning.

* Option D is correct: backlog estimation enables velocity-based forecasting.

* Option A and B come after estimation is complete.

* Option C is too narrow—iteration planning comes later.

- B. Log the risk in the risk register, and share the information with impacted stakeholders at the next monthly review meeting.
- C. Move the work to the vendor, since they have better knowledge of interface implementation.
- D. Create a spike story to determine what needs to be done to use the new interface.
