NEW QUESTION # 693

The chief audit executive of an international organization is planning an audit of the treasury function located at the organization's headquarters. The current internal audit team at headquarters lacks expertise in the area of financial markets which is needed for the engagement. When of the following would be the most approbate solution considering the time constraint?

- A. Invite a guest auditor from one of the organization's affiliates who has expertise in the area of financial markets.
- B. Outsource the engagement to the organization's external auditor who has expertise in the area of financial markets.
- C. Limit the scope of the engagement to the knowledge and skills possessed by the internal audit team.
- D. Hire additional internal auditors who have expertise in the area of financial markets.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Given the time constraint and the need for specialized knowledge in financial markets, inviting a guest auditor from one of the organization's affiliates who has the required expertise is the most appropriate solution. This approach leverages existing internal resources with the necessary skills, which can be more efficient and cost- effective than hiring new staff or outsourcing the engagement. Additionally, it facilitates knowledge sharing and can help build internal audit capacity for future engagements.

NEW QUESTION # 694

An internal auditor is starting the fieldwork of an assurance engagement. The auditor will conduct a walkthrough of selected controls with control owners. What should be the primary objective of this walkthrough?

- A. Collect the policies and procedures relevant to the audited area
- B. Define the objectives of the assurance engagement
- C. Understand the financial results published for the period under review
- D. Assess the design of the internal controls in place

Answer: D

Explanation:

Comprehensive and Detailed Explanation:

A walkthrough is an audit procedure in which the auditor follows a transaction through the entire process, discussing with control owners and observing how policies and procedures are applied. The primary purpose of this exercise is to assess the design of internal controls (C). It helps the auditor verify whether controls exist, are properly designed, and are implemented as described. Collecting policies (A) supports documentation, but policies alone do not confirm control design. Financial results (B) relate to performance reporting, not walkthroughs. Engagement objectives (D) are defined during planning, not during walkthrough. Therefore, the walkthrough's goal is to evaluate whether controls are appropriately designed to mitigate risks, aligning with IIA Standard 2310 (sufficiency and relevance of information).

- B. A plan based on individual preferences and proposals, which helps internal auditors achieve greater success.
- C. A plan that focuses on filling gaps in the current skills needed to complete audit objectives.
- D. A plan that ensures internal auditors collectively possess expertise in various fields to avoid outsourcing.

Answer: C

Explanation:

- * A. A plan that focuses on furthering the independence of the internal audit activity: While independence is essential, it is not directly related to professional development planning, which addresses skill enhancement.
- * B. A plan that ensures internal auditors collectively possess expertise in various fields to avoid outsourcing: This may be a benefit of professional development but is not its primary objective.
- * C. A plan based on individual preferences and proposals, which helps internal auditors achieve greater success: This option emphasizes individual goals rather than aligning professional development with organizational needs.
- * D. A plan that focuses on filling gaps in the current skills needed to complete audit objectives: Correct.

Professional development should address skill gaps to enhance the internal audit activity's ability to meet its objectives effectively.
