問題 #154

Developers at Universal Containers (UC) use version control to share their code changes, but they notice that when they deploy their code to different environments they often have failures. They decide to set up Continuous Integration (CI). What should the UC development team use to automatically run tests as part of their CI process?

- A. Developer Console
- B. Force.com Toolkit
- C. Salesforce CLI
- D. Visual Studio Code

答案： C

解題說明：

For integrating automated tests into a Continuous Integration (CI) process, the Universal Containers development team should use the Salesforce CLI.

Option C: Salesforce CLI

Automated Testing:

Developers can use the `sfdx force:apex:test:run` command to run Apex tests and include it in their CI scripts.

Example Command:

`sfdx force:apex:test:run --testlevel RunLocalTests --resultformat human --outputdir test-results` Reference:

"Use Salesforce CLI to automate your development and build CI/CD pipelines."

- Salesforce CLI Command Reference

Why Other Options Are Incorrect:

Option A: Developer Console

The Developer Console is a web-based tool within Salesforce for development but is not suitable for automating tests in a CI process.

Option B: Visual Studio Code

While VS Code with Salesforce extensions is a powerful IDE, it is not a CI tool itself. It can be used to develop code but not to automate tests as part of a CI pipeline.

Option D: Force.com Toolkit

The Force.com Toolkit is outdated and does not provide the necessary functionality for modern CI processes.

Conclusion:

Salesforce CLI is the appropriate tool for integrating automated testing into a CI pipeline, allowing developers to script test runs and integrate with CI servers.
