NEW QUESTION # 35

Which one of the following statements defines beta testing BEST?

- A. Beta testers discover defects in the product that escaped during the development process.
- B. Beta testing is performed by developers at the customer's location.

- C. During beta testing, genuine users define the acceptance criteria for various realistic configurations.
- D. Beta testing takes place early in the development process to acquire feedback from the market.

Answer: A

Explanation:

Beta testing is conducted after internal development and testing activities have concluded. It serves as a last line of defense before release by involving real users in real-world usage. One of its primary purposes is to uncover defects, usability problems, or configuration issues that were not found during structured testing.

Option D is correct because it captures the essential role of beta testing - to identify issues in the field that may have slipped past internal test processes, including edge cases or environmental incompatibilities that were not part of the standard test environments.

Other options are incorrect:

Option A is incorrect - beta testing is not performed by developers, and usually not at the customer's site under development supervision.

Option B is misleading - beta testing occurs late in the process, not "early in development." Option C is inaccurate - beta testing is not about defining acceptance criteria. Those should already be established. Beta testers validate the product against those criteria or their practical needs.

Exact Reference - ISTQB CTFL Acceptance Testing Syllabus (Section 3.2):

"Beta testing is performed by users and may identify defects or issues that were not found during internal testing due to differences in environments, workflows, or usage patterns."
