- A. Produce an asymmetric key on both sides
- B. Produce a pair of public and private keys
- C. Produce a symmetric key on both sides
- D. Symmetric keys based on pre-shared secret

Answer: B

NEW QUESTION # 55

What is NOT monitored as a PNOTE by ClusterXL?

- A. TED
- B. RouteD
- C. VPND
- D. Policy

Answer: A

Explanation:

ClusterXL is Check Point's high-availability and load-sharing solution, which monitors critical components to ensure cluster functionality. PNOTEs (Problem Notifications) are specific conditions or processes monitored by ClusterXL to detect failures or issues that could impact the cluster's operation. When a PNOTE is triggered, ClusterXL may initiate a failover to maintain service continuity.

Option A: Correct. TED (Threat Emulation Daemon) is not monitored as a PNOTE by ClusterXL. TED is part of the Threat Emulation blade, which handles sandboxing and emulation tasks, but it is not a critical cluster component monitored by ClusterXL.

Option B: Incorrect. Policy installation status is monitored as a PNOTE by ClusterXL. If a policy fails to install or becomes corrupted, ClusterXL can detect this as a critical issue and trigger a failover.

Option C: Incorrect. RouteD (Routing Daemon) is monitored as a PNOTE by ClusterXL. Routing issues, such as the failure of dynamic routing protocols, are critical for cluster operations, especially in environments with dynamic routing enabled.

Option D: Incorrect. VPND (VPN Daemon) is monitored as a PNOTE by ClusterXL. VPN functionality is critical in many deployments, and ClusterXL monitors VPND to ensure VPN tunnels remain operational.

Reference:

The Check Point R81.20 ClusterXL Administration Guide details the components monitored by ClusterXL via PNOTEs, including policy installation, routing (RouteD), and VPN (VPND). The CCTE R81.20 course covers ClusterXL troubleshooting, including understanding PNOTEs and their role in failover decisions. While TED is part of Check Point's Threat Prevention suite, it is not listed as a PNOTE in ClusterXL documentation.

For precise details, refer to:

Check Point R81.20 ClusterXL Administration Guide, section on "Problem Notification (PNOTE)" (available via Check Point Support Center).

CCTE R81.20 Courseware, which includes modules on ClusterXL monitoring and troubleshooting (available through authorized training partners like Arrow Education or Red Education).
