IBM MQ v9.4 Administrator - Professional Sample Questions (Q232-Q237):

NEW QUESTION # 232

In scenarios where applications must be notified about changes in queue conditions, such as when a message arrives in an empty queue, which IBM MQ capability is used to automatically start a process or application in response to those queue events?

- A. Triggering mechanisms defined on queues
- B. Security exits applied to channels
- C. Logging subsystems that capture administrative events
- D. Non-persistent messaging with low overhead

Answer: A

Explanation:

Queue triggers allow IBM MQ to start an application automatically when defined conditions occur, such as the arrival of a message, enabling automation and responsiveness.

NEW QUESTION # 233

IBM MQ provides transaction support for message processing. Which of the following options accurately describes how MQ handles transactional integrity, ensuring that a group of message operations is completed as a single atomic unit?

- A. MQ transactions commit each message independently without considering other messages, which allows partial success.
- B. MQ transactions automatically replicate messages across all queues in a cluster without rollback capability.
- C. MQ transactions use a unit of work to group message operations, committing all or rolling back all if any operation fails, thereby maintaining atomicity.
- D. MQ transactions require external database systems to manage atomicity; MQ itself does not provide transaction support.

Answer: C

Explanation:

IBM MQ supports transactions using units of work. All operations in a transaction either succeed together or fail together, ensuring data consistency and atomicity.

NEW QUESTION # 234

In IBM MQ, administrators often configure multiple queue managers to work together for high availability. Which explanation correctly details how multi-instance queue managers function, how they provide failover, and what differences exist compared to clustering?

- A. Multi-instance queue managers operate independently without sharing state, and clustering automatically merges queues into a single logical queue.
- B. Multi-instance queue managers maintain a primary and standby instance sharing the same storage, automatically failing over if the primary fails, whereas clustering connects multiple independent queue managers to enable load balancing and routing.
- C. Multi-instance queue managers require manual intervention to switch to the standby instance, while clustering provides automatic failover.
- D. Multi-instance queue managers replicate all messages in real-time to every other queue manager, while clusters only monitor message flow.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Multi-instance queue managers provide high availability by maintaining a standby instance that takes over automatically if the primary fails, while clustering offers routing, load balancing, and high availability across multiple independent queue managers.

NEW QUESTION # 235

In an enterprise integration scenario, if multiple applications produce messages to a queue and multiple consuming applications need to process these messages independently without affecting each other's processing, which IBM MQ pattern should be used to achieve this type of decoupled communication?

- A. Distributed transaction queues
- B. Point-to-point queues
- C. Publish/subscribe model
- D. Request/reply queues

Answer: C

Explanation:

The publish/subscribe model in IBM MQ allows multiple consumers to independently receive messages published to a topic, ensuring decoupled communication.

NEW QUESTION # 236

In IBM MQ, when configuring message delivery for a mission-critical financial application that must maintain strict transaction integrity, which combination of features ensures that all messages are delivered once and only once, even in the event of network failure or queue manager crash?

- A. Non-persistent messages with asynchronous commit

- B. Alias queues forwarding messages without acknowledgment
- C. Temporary messages with retry logic
- D. Persistent messages within an MQ transaction with commit control

Answer: D

Explanation:

Persistent messages within a transactional unit ensure messages are not lost and are delivered exactly once. The transaction commit guarantees integrity even if failures occur.
