NEW QUESTION # 422
A solution architect must create a disaster recovery (DR) plan for a high-volume software as a service (SaaS) platform. All data for the platform is stored in an Amazon Aurora MySQL DB cluster.
The DR plan must replcate data to a secondary AWS Region.
Which solution will meet these requirements MOST cost-effectively?
Use MySQL binary log replication to an Aurora cluster

- A. Use MySQL binary log replication to an Aurora cluster in the secondary Region Provision one DB instance for the Aurora cluster in the secondary Region.
- B. Use AWS Database Migration Service (AWS QMS) to continuously replicate data to an Aurora cluster in the secondary Region Remove the DB instance from the secondary Region.
- C. Set up an Aurora global database for the DB cluster. When setup is complete, remove the DB instance from the secondary Region.
- D. Set up an Aurora global database for the DB cluster Specify a minimum of one DB instance in the secondary Region

Answer: D

Explanation:
"Replication from the primary DB cluster to all secondaries is handled by the Aurora storage layer rather than by the database engine, so lag time for replicating changes is minimal-typically, less than 1 second. Keeping the database engine out of the replication process meansthat the database engine is dedicated to processing workloads. It also means that you don't need to configure or manage the Aurora MySQL binlog (binary logging) replication."
