NEW QUESTION # 149

A company has selected a project manager to upgrade security at its manufacturing plants. A risk assessment for each plant has been completed. Which of the following is the first action of the project manager?

- A. Solicit a request for information
- B. Develop a phased implementation plan
- C. Develop a concept design to solicit support from senior management
- D. Have construction documents prepared and sent to prospective contractors for bids

Answer: C

Explanation:

After a risk assessment is completed, the first step for a project manager is to create a concept design. This outlines the proposed system and supports budget justification and strategic alignment with management's objectives. Gaining senior management buy-in is essential before progressing to detailed design or procurement.

A (RFI) may follow concept approval.

C (Construction documents) are created much later.

D (Implementation planning) is dependent on approved design and funding.

NEW QUESTION # 152

Which of the following error-rate combinations with a biometric entry control device provides the highest level of security?

- A. High false acceptance and high false rejection
- B. Low false acceptance and low false rejection
- C. High false acceptance and low false rejection
- D. Low false acceptance and high false rejection

Answer: D

Explanation:

In biometric systems:

False Acceptance Rate (FAR) represents unauthorized access.

False Rejection Rate (FRR) represents inconvenience to legitimate users.

From a security perspective, a low FAR is more critical because it ensures that unauthorized individuals are not granted access. A higher FRR can be tolerated in high-security environments, as it affects convenience rather than security.

A (low/low) is ideal but harder to achieve.

C and D (high FAR) compromise security.
