NEW QUESTION # 90

What is the difference between deep packet inspection and stateful inspection?

- A. Deep packet inspection allows visibility on Layer 7 and stateful inspection allows visibility on Layer 4
- B. Stateful inspection verifies contents at Layer 4 and deep packet inspection verifies connection at Layer 7
- C. Deep packet inspection is more secure than stateful inspection on Layer 4
- D. Stateful inspection is more secure than deep packet inspection on Layer 7

Answer: A

Explanation:

Deep packet inspection (DPI) and stateful inspection are two techniques that are used by firewalls and other network security devices to inspect and filter network traffic. Stateful inspection allows visibility on Layer 4 (transport layer) of the OSI model, which means it can track the state of TCP or UDP connections and filter packets based on source and destination IP addresses, ports, and protocols. Deep packet inspection allows visibility on Layer 7 (application layer) of the OSI model, which means it can inspect the contents and payloads of packets and filter packets based on application-specific criteria, such as signatures, keywords, URLs, or behaviors. References:

NEW QUESTION # 94

Refer to the exhibit. An employee received an email from an unknown sender with an attachment and reported it as a phishing attempt. An engineer uploaded the file to Cuckoo for further analysis. What should an engineer interpret from the provided Cuckoo report?

- A. MD5 of the file was not identified as malicious.
- B. The file is clean and does not represent a risk.
- C. Cuckoo cleaned the malicious file and prepared it for usage.
- D. Win32.polip.a.exe is an executable file and should be flagged as malicious.

Answer: D

Explanation:

The Cuckoo report indicates that the file is a PE32 executable for MS Windows, which is typically an executable file format. The presence of the watermark "CHINESEDUMPS" and the detection ratio from VirusTotal suggest that the file is recognized by multiple antivirus engines as potentially harmful.
