- A. Reevaluate the minimum viable product (MVP) deliverables to remove high-risk stories and meet timelines.
- B. Adjust the story points included in each sprint to represent the actual velocity.
- C. Perform value stream analysis to eliminate the processes with wastage.
- D. Include high-risk stories in earlier sprints to deliver incremental velocity.

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 397

NEW QUESTION # 398

A scrum team is working together virtually. One of the team members sends a daily email to the other team members listing impediments that they find. During retrospective meetings, the team member complains that their colleagues fail to take actions on the impediments.

How should the team address this issue?

- A. Team members should state that they need to prioritize their work instead of responding to daily emails about impediments.
- B. They should ask for more details about the impediments and then resolve them when the team has more time to investigate.
- C. The team member that is complaining should talk individually with the scrum master to remove impediments.
- D. The team member that is complaining should address the impediments in daily scrum, communicating them directly.

Answer: D

Explanation:

The daily scrum is the appropriate forum for team members to raise and discuss any impediments or blockers they are facing. By addressing the impediments directly in the daily scrum, the team can collaborate and work together to find solutions in real time. This ensures that issues are identified early and are dealt with in a timely manner. Relying solely on emails for communication can lead to missed opportunities for immediate resolution and may cause frustration, as seen in this case. Encouraging the team member to raise the impediments during the daily scrum will help ensure they are addressed quickly and effectively.
