- D. POLDAT

Answer: C

Explanation:

Explanation

SMART is an acronym that stands for Specific, Measurable, Achievable, Relevant, and Time-bound. It is a widely used approach to assess the business goals and their validity and longevity. SMART helps to ensure that the business goals are clear, realistic, and aligned with the business vision and strategy. SMART also helps to monitor and evaluate the progress and outcomes of the business goals. By using SMART, business analysts can define the business needs and requirements more effectively, and communicate them to the stakeholders more efficiently12. References:

NEW QUESTION # 290

You are the business analyst for your organization and are about to conduct requirements elicitation for a process to streamline the customer fulfillment system your organization uses. You need to understand how the people, processes, and technology within the customer fulfillment system operates before you begin the elicitation process.

What type of analytical thinking are you participating in this scenario?

- A. System thinking
- B. Brainstorming
- C. Creative thinking
- D. Problem solving

Answer: A

Explanation:

System thinking is a type of analytical thinking that involves understanding how the components of a system interact with each other and affect the whole. System thinking helps the business analyst to see the big picture, identify the root causes of problems, and design solutions that address the system as a whole. System thinking is essential for conducting requirements elicitation for a process that involves people, processes, and technology, as these are interrelated and interdependent elements of a system. The other options are not types of analytical thinking, but rather techniques or skills that can be used in different situations. References:
