Which of the following is the earliest test level where this requirement should start to be tested?

SELECT ONE OPTION:

- A. During user acceptance testing using a WAMMI survey
- B. During system testing
- C. During component testing
- D. During beta acceptance testing

Answer: B

Explanation:

Comprehensive and Detailed In-Depth Explanation:

* Component Testing (C) focuses on individual components or units and does not address usability or role-based testing.

* System Testing (D) is the first level where the complete and integrated system is tested as a whole.

It includes testing non-functional requirements such as usability, accessibility, and suitability for different user roles.

* User Acceptance Testing (A) and Beta Acceptance Testing (B) are done later and focus on validating the product according to user needs and real-world scenarios.

Since testing for role appropriateness and usability should start as early as possible in the testing lifecycle, the correct answer is D (During system testing).
