Answer: C,E,F

Explanation:

Explanation

According to the ServiceNow Hardware Asset Management overview document¹, the Hardware asset overview view is a dashboard that provides a summary of the hardware assets in your organization, such as asset count, asset value, asset age, and asset refresh¹.

The Hardware asset overview view has several Quick links that allow you to access different reports and modules related to hardware asset management¹.

By default, the Quick links that are available on the Hardware asset overview view are¹:

Assets eligible for refresh by model category: This report shows the number of assets that are eligible for refresh based on their model category and age. You can use this report to plan and budget for asset replacement or upgrade.

Asset count by model category: This report shows the number of assets grouped by their model category, such as computer, network, or printer. You can use this report to view the distribution and composition of your asset portfolio.

Asset count by lifecycle state: This report shows the number of assets grouped by their lifecycle state, such as in use, in stock, or retired. You can use this report to view the status and utilization of your assets.

The other options are not Quick links that are available on the Hardware asset overview view by default. Transfer orders, asset requests, and model normalization are modules that you can access from the Hardware Asset Management application menu, but they are not Quick links on the dashboard.
