AACN CCRN (Adult) - Direct Care Eligibility Pathway Sample Questions (Q12-Q17):

NEW QUESTION # 12

Being sensitive to diversity while providing care includes understanding:

- A. Delineating standard goals of therapy will help enhance patient adherence to a therapeutic regimen
- B. The ability to facilitate learning for patients, families, and staff
- C. Health beliefs among members of a cultural group are generally similar
- D. How to recognize and incorporate differences into the multidisciplinary plan of care

Answer: D

Explanation:

One of the eight nurse competencies of the Synergy Model is response to diversity, which is described as a sensitivity to recognize, appreciate, and incorporate differences into the provision of care.

Thus, being sensitive to diversity means that the nurse must recognize and incorporate the patient's differences into the plan of care to optimize success for the patient. Synergy results when the needs and characteristics of a patient and clinical unit or system are matched with a nurse's competencies.

The ability to facilitate learning for patients, families, and staff describes the nurse competency of 'facilitation of learning' and not the nurse competency of "response to diversity."

NEW QUESTION # 13

Which of the following is a sign of splenic injury and diaphragmatic irritation?

- A. tachypnea
- B. left shoulder pain
- C. flank pain
- D. hiccoughs

Answer: B

Explanation:

Left shoulder pain, also known as Kehr sign, is a sign of splenic injury and diaphragmatic irritation. It is caused by the irritation of the phrenic nerve, which innervates both the diaphragm and the shoulder, by blood or other fluids in the left upper quadrant. Tachypnea, flank pain, and hiccoughs are not specific signs of splenic injury or diaphragmatic irritation.

NEW QUESTION # 14

If compartment syndrome is suspected, what is the MOST accurate way to diagnose this condition?

- A. Radiographic imaging
- B. Pain, pallor, and pulselessness
- C. Physical exam of tissue swelling and reports of pain
- D. Direct pressure measurement via needle insertion

Answer: D

Explanation:

A definitive diagnosis of compartment syndrome requires direct measurements of pressures within the body compartment affected.

The use of a specialized needle is inserted directly into the tissue compartment while an attached pressure monitor (transducer) records the pressures.

All of the other answer options may be present as well, but in varying degrees, and largely dependent on the nature of the injury. Radiographic imaging will not diagnose compartment syndrome.

NEW QUESTION # 15

A new nurse on your team often appears overwhelmed during busy shifts. As an experienced nurse, how can you support her in the ICU environment?

- A. Let her learn on her own over time so that she develops independence as a nurse
- B. Explain that being overwhelmed during busy shifts is just a part of ICU nursing that she will need to get used to
- C. Talk with her about how she needs to focus on working harder and faster when things are busier
- D. Discuss how to use prioritization and delegation during busy shifts

Answer: D

Explanation:

Being overwhelmed during busy shifts is a common problem in ICU nursing. Effective prioritization and delegation can help to minimize this problem. Working harder and faster when things are busier will not be nearly as effective as improved prioritization and delegation skills. Letting her learn on her own over time so that she develops independence as a nurse is not appropriate, as nurses are responsible for helping and supporting other members of their team, especially newer team members.

NEW QUESTION # 16

Pain in the elderly patient is often reported differently than that of a younger patient due to all of the following changes that accompany aging EXCEPT:

- A. social
- B. cultural
- C. psychological
- D. physiological

Answer: A

Explanation:

Social changes may occur with age, but are not related to pain like other aging related changes.

Psychological, physiologic, and cultural changes occur with aging; some elderly patients may fear loss of control or independence, or may even associate pain with impending death. For these reasons, elderly patients may not report their pain accurately, as if to deny pain is to deny death. It is important for nurses to incorporate behavioral or physiologic indicators of pain into a variety of pain assessment strategies when caring for elderly patients.
