NEW QUESTION # 139
Malicious downloads that result from malicious office documents being manipulated are caused by which of the following?

- A. Clickjacking
- B. Impersonation
- C. Registry key manipulation
- D. Macro abuse

Answer: D

Explanation:
Malicious downloads initiated through manipulated office documents typically involve macro abuse. Macros are scripts that can automate tasks within documents and are embedded within Office documents like Word, Excel, and PowerPoint files. While macros can be used for legitimate purposes, they can also be abused by attackers to execute maliciouscode. When an office document with a malicious macro is opened, and macros are enabled, the macro can run arbitrary code that leads to malicious downloads, installing malware or performing other unauthorized actions on the victim's system.

Macro abuse has become a common vector for cyber attacks, as it exploits the functionality of widely used office applications. Attackers often craft phishing emails with attachments or links to documents that contain malicious macros, tricking users into enabling macros to execute the malicious code. This method is effective for bypassing some security measures since it relies on user interaction and exploitation of legitimate features.
References:In the ECIH v3 course by EC-Council, there is a focus on various methods used by attackers to compromise systems, including macro abuse in office documents. The curriculum stresses the importance of understanding these attack vectors for effective incident handling and response strategies.
