API Risk Based Inspection Professional Sample Questions (Q64-Q69):

NEW QUESTION # 64

Why is it important to understand the difference between RBI accuracy and RBI precision?

- A. RBI precision is more important than RBI accuracy.
- B. Quantitative RBI methods are more accurate than qualitative methods.
- C. The implied linkage between RBI accuracy and precision may not exist.
- D. RBI accuracy cannot be fully achieved with qualitative RBI analysis.

Answer: C

Explanation:

According to Section 5.4 of API 580:

"Risk presented as a precise numeric value (as in a quantitative analysis) implies a greater level of accuracy...

However, the implied linkage of precision and accuracy may not exist because of the element of uncertainty that is inherent with probabilities and consequences." This clearly supports that Option D is correct. While quantitative methods appear precise, their accuracy may be affected by model limitations, uncertainty, and data variability. Therefore, understanding this distinction helps practitioners avoid overconfidence in the output of RBI tools.

- C. To understand about equipment history

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 67

Depending on the methodology employed in qualitative analysis, the categories may be described with words such as

- A. Numerical descriptors only
- B. High, medium or low only
- C. High, medium or low or may have numerical descriptors.

Answer: C

NEW QUESTION # 68

Which mitigation system most effectively minimizes community exposure to a significant release of an acidic water-soluble vapor cloud?

- A. Blast resistance construction
- B. Toxic scrubbers
- C. Acid detectors
- D. Water curtain

Answer: D

Explanation:

API 580, Section 13.11 states:

"Water curtains mitigate water-soluble vapor clouds by absorption as well as dilution... Early activation is required to achieve significant risk reduction. The curtain should preferably be between the release location and ignition sources or locations where people are likely to be present." Toxic scrubbers are used for venting or building protection, but water curtains directly mitigate dispersion of water-soluble acidic clouds in open areas.
