* Option A: Adding users to the list of authorized console users inside Customer Identity Access site settings is not the correct method for granting partner account access.

* Option B: The "Invite Member" option is typically used for inviting members to teams or groups, not for granting administrator access.

* Option C: The access request portal is used for requesting access, not for granting it.

* Option D: The "Invite Administrator" option is the correct and official method for granting access to partner accounts.

NEW QUESTION # 67

How can you retrieve subscription and email account data from SAP Customer Data Cloud?

- A. Using accounts.getLiteToken and accounts.getAccountinfo
- B. Using accounts.getLiteToken and accounts.register
- C. Using accounts.login and accounts.getAccountinfo
- D. Using accounts.register and accounts.getAccountinfo

Answer: D

Explanation:

To retrieve subscription and email account data from SAP Customer Data Cloud, you can use the following API calls:

* accounts.getLiteToken: This generates a lightweight token for the user, which is required for certain operations.

* accounts.getAccountInfo: This retrieves detailed account information, including subscription and email-related data.

* Option A: Correct. Combining accounts.getLiteToken with accounts.getAccountInfo allows you to authenticate the user and retrieve their account details, including subscriptions and email data.

* Option B: Incorrect. While accounts.register creates a new account, it does not retrieve existing account data like subscriptions or email information.

* Option C: Incorrect. Using accounts.getLiteToken and accounts.register together does not make sense because register is for creating accounts, not retrieving data.

* Option D: Incorrect. accounts.login authenticates the user but does not directly retrieve subscription or email data. You would still need to call accounts.getAccountInfo afterward.
