NEW QUESTION # 48

When delivering a Huawei OceanStor Pacific storage project, a Huawei engineer vigorously promoted the SmartEncryption feature of scale-out storage to customers. Which of the following statements is false about this feature?

- A. When the data is read using the DPC or NFS protocol, the SED obtains the identity authentication key from the key management server, reads and decrypts the ciphertext data, and then returns the plaintext data to the protocol layer. The protocol layer returns the plaintext data to client applications.
- B. This feature supports encrypted data write using NFS, CIFS, HDFS, or S3. Data is decrypted and read using NFS, CIFS, HDFS, or S3.
- C. The file service client can write plaintext data through the NFS/CIFS/DPC protocol.
- D. Huawei OceanStor Pacific series scale-out storage supports disk encryption. All data delivered by services is stored on self-encrypting disks (SEDs).

Answer: C

Explanation:

The SmartEncryption feature in Huawei OceanStor Pacific ensures data security. The HCIP-Storage V5.5 Training Material (Module 3: Scale-Out Storage Technologies) explains:

- Option A: True. "For DPC or NFS reads, self-encrypting disks (SEDs) retrieve authentication keys from the key management server, decrypt ciphertext, and return plaintext to the protocol layer."

- Option B: True. "SmartEncryption supports encrypted writes and decrypted reads via NFS, CIFS, HDFS, and S3 protocols."

- Option C: False. "SmartEncryption encrypts data at the storage layer. Clients using NFS, CIFS, or DPC write data that is automatically encrypted by the system before storage, not written as plaintext."

- Option D: True. "OceanStor Pacific uses SEDs for disk-level encryption, ensuring all service data is encrypted." Thus, option C is false.
