Huawei HCSA-Presales-Transmission & Access Sample Questions (Q40-Q45):

NEW QUESTION # 40

What advantages does OTN have over WDM? (Multiple choice)

- A. High bandwidth utilization
- B. The branch circuit and the line are separated, and the change of the customer interface does not affect the line investment
- C. Perfect reuse of small-granularity services into large-granularity pipelines
- D. Flexible business scheduling

Answer: A,B,C,D

NEW QUESTION # 41

What is the minimum number of chassis to deploy an 8x200G (2x100GE) WDM system with DC908?

- A. 0
- B. 1
- C. 2
- D. 3

Answer: D

Explanation:

The correct answer is 1. The OptiXtrans DC908 is designed to support high-density configurations, allowing an 8x200G (2x100GE) WDM system to be deployed using just one chassis.

Here's a breakdown of how this is achieved:

* High Integration: The DC908 integrates multiple components, such as optical modules, amplifiers, and control units, into a single compact 2U chassis. This eliminates the need for additional hardware or external devices.

* Scalability: The DC908 supports up to 8 wavelengths per fiber pair, each operating at 200G. This means that all 8x200G channels can be accommodated within a single device.

* Service Aggregation: Each 200G wavelength can carry multiple 100GE services, enabling efficient aggregation of traffic. For example, two 100GE services can be mapped onto a single 200G wavelength.

* Space Efficiency: By consolidating everything into one chassis, the DC908 minimizes rack space requirements, making it ideal for data centers and edge locations where space is limited.

Other options:

* 2, 3, or 4 chassis: These would only be necessary for extremely large-scale deployments or if additional redundancy were required. However, for an 8x200G system, a single chassis is sufficient.

This compact design highlights the DC908's efficiency and cost-effectiveness for modern optical networks.
