NEW QUESTION # 146
During a final investment decision meeting, all of the stakeholders were aligned on the project benefits, proposed budget, and schedule. Before final approval was given, the executive requested an aspirational target for the project team to obtain an enhanced benefit from the project.
What should the project manager do in this situation?

- A. Review the proposal and suggest optional benefit improvement opportunities for the project.
- B. Accept the request and commit to some benefit improvement opportunities for the project.
- C. Investigate the request and express willingness to find ways to obtain higher project benefits.
- D. Explain the planning and budgeting process and demonstrate that the project proposal maximizes benefits.

Answer: A

Explanation:
When stakeholders are aligned and planning is complete, introducing aspirational targets should be handled thoughtfully. Rather than making commitments (which may jeopardize existing project constraints), the project manager should review the proposal and suggest optional or aspirational benefit improvements that do not compromise the approved budget, scope, or schedule.
According to the PMBOK Guide - Seventh Edition, project managers are responsible for balancing competing constraints and ensuring realistic commitments. While enhancing benefits is desirable, it must be done transparently and optionally-not as a new baseline-unless formally approved.
Option A is risky; committing prematurely may create unrealistic expectations.
Option B is vague and lacks the structure of formally suggesting feasible opportunities.
Option D may seem defensive and close-minded.
