How much of the Sprint Backlog must be defined during the Sprint Planning event?

- A. Just enough to understand design and architectural implications.
- B. The entire Sprint Backlog must be identified and estimated by the end of the Sprint Planning meeting.
- C. Just enough tasks for the Scrum Master to be confident in the Development Team's understanding of the Sprint.
- D. Enough so the Development Team can create its best forecast of what is can do, and to start the first several days of the Sprint.

Answer: D

Explanation:
The correct answer is C, because the Scrum Guide states that "the Development Team usually starts by designing the system and the work needed to convert the Product Backlog into a working product Increment. Work planned for the first days of the Sprint by the Development Team is decomposed by the end of this meeting, often to units of one day or less. The Development Team self-organizes to undertake the work in the Sprint Backlog, both during Sprint Planning and as needed throughout the Sprint." Therefore, enough work should be defined during the Sprint Planning event so that the Development Team can create its best forecast of what it can do, and to start the first several days of the Sprint.

- D. During the Daily scrum

Answer: B

Explanation:
According to the Scrum Guide, a Developer becomes accountable for the value of a Product Backlog item selected for the Sprint at the Sprint Planning event. This is when the Developers select items from the Product Backlog that they can commit to complete within a Sprint. The Developers are then responsible for creating a valuable Increment that meets the Definition of Done and the Sprint Goal. The other options are not valid, as they either imply that Developers are not accountable for value (such as never or whenever), or that they become accountable at a different time (such as during the Daily Scrum).
