SailPoint Certified IdentityNow Engineer Sample Questions (Q39-Q44):

NEW QUESTION # 39

Is this an item that an IdentityNow engineer should configure when implementing a source that uses a JDBC connector?

Solution: Use a query select statement with a clause to match the incoming account to an existing account for the Single Account SQL Query configuration item

- A. Yes
- B. No

Answer: A

Explanation:

Yes, using a query select statement with a clause to match the incoming account to an existing account is a key configuration for the Single Account SQL Query in a JDBC connector. This query is used to fetch specific account details from the database and must be written in such a way that it uniquely identifies each account, ensuring accurate correlation between the data in the source and the identities in IdentityNow. Properly configuring this SQL query ensures the right accounts are matched and managed.

NEW QUESTION # 40

Is this statement true about deploying and configuring IdentityNow's virtual appliance (VA)?

Solution: When using the AWS deployment option, the identityNow engineer needs to convert the VA image in order to deploy it.

- A. No
- B. Yes

Answer: A

Explanation:

No, when deploying the Virtual Appliance (VA) using the AWS deployment option, the IdentityNow engineer does not need to convert the VA image. SailPoint provides an AWS-compatible Amazon Machine Image (AMI) that can be directly used to deploy the VA in AWS without any additional conversion steps. The AMI is shared with the customer's AWS account, allowing for a streamlined deployment process.

Key Reference from SailPoint Documentation:

VA Deployment in AWS: SailPoint provides a ready-to-use AMI for AWS deployments, and no image conversion is necessary for this deployment method.

NEW QUESTION # 41

An engineer needs to troubleshoot the following issue:

Incomplete Identities on authoritative source

Is this a reasonable action for the engineer to take?

Solution: Review the All Source Activity report available in Search.

- A. Yes
- B. No

Answer: A

Explanation:

Yes, reviewing the All Source Activity report available in Search is a reasonable action when troubleshooting incomplete identities. This report provides an overview of activity related to source systems, including account aggregations, transformations, and data flow from the source to IdentityNow. By reviewing this report, engineers can identify potential issues such as failed aggregations, data errors, or problems with source connectivity that might be causing incomplete identities.

NEW QUESTION # 42

A customer wants to configure a virtual appliance (VA) to use a static IP address. Does this file on the VA need to be modified to perform the configuration?

Solution: /etc/ systemd/network/ static, network

- A. Yes
- B. No

Answer: A

Explanation:

Yes, the file /etc/systemd/network/static.network (or a similarly named file depending on the Linux distribution used by the Virtual Appliance) is typically used to configure a static IP address for the VA.

This file is part of the systemd network configuration, and modifying it allows you to specify static IP settings, such as the IP address, netmask, gateway, and DNS servers, for the Virtual Appliance's network interface.

To set a static IP address, you would need to modify this file and restart the network service for the changes to take effect.

NEW QUESTION # 43

Is the following true about the web-services connector in IdentityNow?

Solution: The connector supports SAML authentication.

- A. No
- B. Yes

Answer: A

Explanation:

The Web Services connector in SailPoint IdentityNow does not support SAML authentication. SAML is primarily used for Single Sign-On (SSO) authentication for web applications, whereas the Web Services connector in IdentityNow typically supports Basic Authentication, OAuth, or custom header- based authentication for API-based integrations. SAML authentication is generally used for federated identity management rather than for API-based interactions.
