NEW QUESTION # 118
A financial organization has many customers who close their accounts every year. The organization wants to use data and AI to identify at-risk customers, so they can retain customers by offering discounts and improved services. What should the organization do?

- A. Create a dashboard of previous customers that have exited, and look for obvious correlations in the visualization.
- B. Create a ML model based on the demographics and activities of previous customers that exited.
- C. Create a survey for all customers to identify their current level of satisfaction.
- D. Create a report based on last year's customer feedback.

Answer: B

Explanation:
Creating a machine learning (ML) model to analyze the demographics and behaviors of customers who have previously closed their accounts is an effective approach to identify at-risk customers. This model can predict which current customers are most likely to leave, allowing the organization to proactively offer discounts or improved services to retain them.
Option D: Create a ML model based on the demographics and activities of previous customers that exited is correct because it uses data-driven insights and AI to identify patterns and predict future customer behavior.
