You are building a custom application in Azure to process resumes for the HR department.

The app must monitor submissions of resumes.

You need to parse the resumes and save contact and skills information into the Common Data Service.

Which mechanism should you use?

- A. Power Automate
- B. Custom workflow activity
- C. Web API
- D. Common Data Service plug-in

Answer: A

Explanation:

Improve operational efficiency with a unified view of business data by creating flows that use Dataverse (Common Data Service has been renamed to Microsoft Dataverse as of November 2020).

For example, you can use Dataverse within Power Automate in these key ways:

Create a flow to import data, export data, or take action (such as sending a notification) when data changes.

Instead of creating an approval loop through email, create a flow that stores approval state in an entity, and then build a custom app in which users can approve or reject items.

Explanation

Box 1: IsBlank

The IsBlank function tests for a blank value or an empty string. The test includes empty strings to ease app creation since some data sources and controls use an empty string when there is no value present.

Box 2: IsType

The IsType function tests whether a record reference refers to a specific table type.

Box 3: AsType

The AsType function treats a record reference as a specific table type, sometimes referred to as casting. You can use the result as if it were a record of the table and again use the Record.Field notation to access all of the fields of that record. An error occurs if the reference isn't of the specific type.
