NEW QUESTION # 186

You are an implementation consultant working at a company where project schedules have been managed primarily with Microsoft Project, on individual desktops. The "projects" theoretically have been multiple-year projects. Your scope of work includes migrating project data from legacy project plans and setting up project planning standards. As you look into the current Microsoft Project plans, it becomes clear that the projects are not really multi-year projects. The plans have been managed by creating "new" projects within the old projects by skipping a few lines in what has become more of a program history. What approach would you recommend to retain the legacy data (which is a mandated requirement in the new Primavera system), while moving forward with a "one project, one plan" process?

- A. Import MS Project plans but break out current in-flight work into separate projects.
- B. Create new projects only for in flight work identified in MS Project plans.
- C. Import all MS Project plans directly into the P6 production database "as is."
- D. Retire legacy project plans and start with new project planning standards.

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 187

Your customer wants to take advantage of capacity planning in portfolios. The customer would like to use generic resources, because they have greater flexibility to respond to changing costs by resource by location. In fact, they would prefer not to set up any roles at all in the database, because they perceive generic resources and roles to be duplicate effort. What would an appropriate response be to this customer?

- A. Use roles for planning and project financials to eliminate duplicate data maintenance.
- B. Integrate with HR systems to obtain automated generic resource pricing updates.
- C. Use generic resources in Capacity Planning view, because they have greater ability to respond to changing costs.
- D. User generic resources for project financials, and mirrored roles for capacity planning.

Answer: B
