Axis Network Video Exam Sample Questions (Q197-Q202):

NEW QUESTION # 197

In which cases would a people counting analytic be used with an Axis camera (Choose three)?

- A. Enhanced service levels for public transportation
- B. Statistics for retail stores
- C. Early warning system for flooding
- D. Crowd detection for marketing purpose
- E. Fire protection in subways

Answer: A,B,D

Explanation:

People counting analytics with Axis cameras are utilized for various purposes. In retail stores, these analytics provide valuable statistics on customer foot traffic, helping with operational and marketing decisions.

Enhanced service levels for public transportation benefit from people counting by monitoring passenger loads and optimizing service schedules. Crowd detection for marketing purposes leverages the analytics to understand customer behavior and preferences in different areas, which can influence marketing strategies.

Axis Communications highlights these use cases in their documentation, emphasizing the analytics' role in improving operational efficiency and strategic planning.

NEW QUESTION # 198

As this person enters the scene, what is true about P-frames?

- A. They decrease in size
- B. They become less frequent
- C. They increase in size
- D. They become more frequent

Answer: C

Explanation:

As a person enters the scene, P-frames (Predictive frames) increase in size. P-frames contain only the changes in the image from the previous frame (I-frame or another P-frame). When there is movement or new objects enter the scene, more data is needed to describe the changes, resulting in larger P-frames. References: Axis Communications documentation on video compression and frame types in H.264.

NEW QUESTION # 199

Which of these scenes can be compressed the most without losing quality?

- A. Empty office
- B. City skyline
- C. City street
- D. Train on tracks

Answer: A

Explanation:

"Scenes with large areas of uniform color and little movement, such as an empty office, are more compressible without noticeable loss in quality because there is less detail and fewer changes between frames."

- Axis Communications Academy, Network Video Fundamentals, 2022

"Static and simple scenes (e.g., an empty room) require less data and can be compressed more efficiently than complex or busy scenes."

NEW QUESTION # 200

Which statements apply to audio in an IP-based video system? (Select two)

- A. Some Axis video encoders allow the use of audio with analog cameras
- B. Simplex mode allows two-way audio but only in one direction at a time
- C. The quality of an audio stream improves with a higher compression rate
- D. Audio travels over the IP network through separate shielded cables
- E. Audio and video are transmitted to the viewer over the same IP network

Answer: A,E

Explanation:

In an IP-based video system, audio can be transmitted alongside video over the same network, allowing for integrated audio-video surveillance. This enables the simultaneous monitoring of both audio and visual data, enhancing situational awareness. Additionally, some Axis video encoders support audio functionality with analog cameras, allowing these older devices to be integrated into modern IP-based systems and take advantage of audio capabilities. Axis documentation highlights these features, emphasizing the seamless integration of audio and video in IP surveillance solutions and the extended functionality provided by video encoders.
