CompTIA Advanced Security Practitioner (CASP+) Exam Sample Questions (Q592-Q597):

NEW QUESTION # 592

Which of the following is the best reason for obtaining file hashes from a confiscated laptop?

- A. To preserve the chain of custody of files
- B. To prevent metadata tampering on each file
- C. To generate unique identifiers for each file
- D. To later validate the integrity of each file

Answer: D

Explanation:

File hashing is used to create a digital fingerprint of files to detect unauthorized changes. By comparing the hash values before and after analysis, the integrity of the files can be validated. This aligns with CASP+ objective 5.2, which includes forensic evidence integrity and validation methods.

NEW QUESTION # 593

An organization is working to secure its development process to ensure developers cannot deploy artifacts directly into the production environment. Which of the following security practice recommendations would be the best to accomplish this objective?

- A. Implement least privilege access to all systems.
- B. Set up policies and systems with separation of duties.
- C. Enforce job rotations for all developers and administrators.
- D. Roll out security awareness training for all users.
- E. Utilize mandatory vacations for all developers.
- F. Review all access to production systems on a quarterly basis.

Answer: D

NEW QUESTION # 594

An organization is rolling out a robust vulnerability management system to monitor SCADA devices on the network. Which of the following scan types should be used to monitor these system types?

- A. Agent
- B. Web application
- C. Authenticated
- D. Passive

Answer: D

Explanation:

Passive scanning is the safest approach for SCADA systems to avoid disrupting their operations.

It detects vulnerabilities by analyzing network traffic without directly interacting with the systems, aligning with CASP+ objective 4.2, which focuses on securing critical systems and reducing risks during vulnerability management.

NEW QUESTION # 595

A security analyst discovered that the company's WAF was not properly configured. The main web server was breached, and the following payload was found in one of the malicious requests:

<!DOCTYPE doc [
<!ELEMENT doc ANY>
<ENTITY xxe SYSTEM "file:///etc/password">]>
<doc>&xxe;</doc>

Which of the following would BEST mitigate this vulnerability?

- A. Input validation
- B. Data encoding
- C. Network intrusion prevention
- D. CAPTCHA

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 596

A systems administrator was given the following IOC to detect the presence of a malicious piece of software communicating with its command-and-control server:

post /malicious. php
User-Agent: Malicious Tool V 1.0
Host: www.rcalicious.com

The IOC documentation suggests the URL is the only part that could change. Which of the following regular expressions would allow the systems administrator to determine if any of the company hosts are compromised, while reducing false positives?

- A. www\.\.malicious\.com/malicious. php
- B. POST /malicious\. php
- C. malicious. *
- D. Host: [a-z]*\.\.malicious\.com
- E. User-Agent: Malicious Tool. *

Answer: D

Explanation:

In this case, the systems administrator should use the regex Host: [a-z]*.\.malicious.com to determine if any of the company hosts are compromised, while reducing false positives, because this regex would:

Match the Host header in the HTTP request, which specifies the domain name of the command-and-control server.

Allow any subdomain under the malicious.com domain, by using the character class [a-z]*, which matches zero or more lowercase letters.

Escape the dot character in the domain name, by using the backslash , which prevents it from being interpreted as a wildcard that matches any character.

Not match any other parts of the IOC that could change, such as the URL path, the User-Agent header, or the HTTP method.
