Microsoft Dynamics 365 Supply Chain Management Functional Consultant Expert Sample Questions (Q122-Q127):

NEW QUESTION # 122

A company uses engineering change management in Dynamics 365 Supply Chain Management. The Product readiness checks feature is turned off.

An existing engineering product must be reconfigured for a new product readiness policy.

You need to change the product readiness policy.

Where should you make this change?

- A. released product
- B. engineering category
- C. shared product
- D. default order settings
- E. product configuration model

Answer: B

Explanation:

* Product readiness policies are assigned to products at the released product level¹. A released product is a product that has been released to one or more legal entities and can be used in transactions².

* To change the product readiness policy for an existing engineering product, you must go to the Product readiness tab on the Released product details page and select a different policy from the Readiness policy field¹.

* The other options are not correct, because they are not related to product readiness policies. Default order settings are used to define how a product is ordered, received, and sold². A shared product is a product that is defined in the shared product master and can be released to multiple legal entities². An engineering category is a category that is used to group engineering products by their characteristics³. A product configuration model is a model that defines the options and rules for configuring a product.
