CIPS Commercial Contracting Sample Questions (Q101-Q106):

NEW QUESTION # 101

Under English law's general legal principles of contract formation, which of the following are likely to be offers? Select TWO that apply.

- A. Invitation to tender
- B. Advertisement
- C. Catalogue
- D. Quotation
- E. Purchase order

Answer: D

Explanation:

An offer is a full statement of what the offeror is willing to provide and the terms by which they are willing to provide it.

There are some statements that are not offers:

- Invitation to treat: this states that a person or organisation is willing to enter into discussions about the possibility of a deal, but does not confirm a willingness to be bound by any terms mentioned. Catalogues, goods on display and ITTs are invitation to treat. Civil law countries may have different perspective on this matter. Article 2:201 (3) of The Principles of European Contract Law states: 'A proposal to supply goods or services at stated prices made by a professional supplier in a public advertisement or a catalogue, or by a display of goods, is presumed to be an offer to sell or supply at that price until the stock of goods, or the supplier's capacity to supply the service, is exhausted.' Learners are advised to look at their countries' legislation for more information on offer and acceptance.
- Declaration of intention: this is defined as an aim or a plan.
- A 'mere puff' (or boast): this is anything which is not intended to be taken literally or seriously, such as many advertisement.
- Provision of information: merely provides information, but provider does not confirm willingness to be bound.

NEW QUESTION # 102

Since services are intangible, so KPIs for services must be qualitative in all circumstances. Is this statement correct?

- A. Yes, quantitative KPIs are limited to timeliness of supply of goods, defective rates and in-full quantities, which are applied to monitor supplier of physical goods
- B. Yes, the only measure mattered to supply of services is end-users' satisfaction
- C. No, some KPIs for services are measurable by means of outcome, time and space performed
- D. No, KPIs for services must always be quantitative so that they can be measured easily

Answer: C

Explanation:

KPIs are used to monitor supplier's performance. They can be qualitative or quantitative. Of course, service providers can be monitored by quantitative KPIs regarding the outcome achieved (such as uptime in IT contracts), timeliness of deliveries (such as in construction contracts)...

NEW QUESTION # 103

Cleveland Insurance (Cleveland) offers a range of insurance services. The main software used in the call centre is a customer relationship management (CRM) system. Cleveland perceived an urgent need to replace the existing CRM system to deal with the increasing number of customers and services.

Urgent Digital Ltd (Digital) is one of the bidders of Cleveland's ITT. Its bid team is led by Hank Irvine, its technical director. Hank realises that winning the Cleveland contract (valued at approximately £50M) will enhance his career. During discussions with Cleveland, Hank offers certain assurances regarding timescales for the project. He has not carried out any investigations into the viability of the timescales. Hank has little idea whether the timescales can be met.

Cleveland decides that Digital's bid meets with its requirements, especially given the assurances in timescale offered by Hank, and decides to proceed with it, subject to a formal contract. Eventually, a formal contract is signed by both parties. The initial assurances given by Hank about the timing of the project are never going to be achieved and are at best grossly exaggerated.

Hank's pre-contractual assurance is most likely to be an example of which of the following?

- A. Inaccuracy in communication
- B. Threat
- C. Initial impossibility
- D. Fraudulent misrepresentation

Answer: C

Explanation:

Hank's pre-contractual assurances may amount to misrepresentation. Fraudulent misrepresentation is a strong possibility since Hank had carried out no investigations into the viability of the project timescales. This could amount to recklessness in using information without taking any steps to see if it is true or not.

The scenario above was constructed based on the case BSKyB v EDS, a famous case in IT sector.

NEW QUESTION # 104

A procurement professional is preparing a sale & purchase contract of a machinery. Which of the following clauses should be added to the contract? Select TWO that apply

- A. Period of hire
- B. Supplier selection mechanism
- C. Guarantees
- D. Insurance requirements
- E. Ratio decidendi

Answer: C,D

Explanation:

The complexity of the contract will reflect the complexity of the purchase. For simple, low-value purchases, standard terms and conditions may be all that is required, but do not assume that just because the purchase is one-off, the contract will be simple. It may still need to cover the following areas:

- Warranties and guarantees if the one-off purchase has a considerable life-span and is business-critical (e.g., a back-up generator for the office which houses the national computer servers).
- Insurance requirements: including professional indemnity, public/products liability, employer's liability, and cover for any specific risks such as pollution or working at height.
- Specification requirements on quality, timing and delivery
- Minimum quality standards on the business operation (e.g., a catering provider might only be providing sandwiches for a team meeting lunch, but you still need to know its hygiene practices).
- Built-in change process for any goods or services that are beyond very simple (e.g., works contracts always have variations procedures because of the unpredictable nature of such projects).
- Ability to extend the scope of the contract should be minimal or none, and restrained to the single requirement.
- Ability to extend the duration of the contract should be limited to the ability to accommodate unexpected time overruns (which itself should be subject to a damages/penalty provision where they are attributable to the supplier, and an extension to overheads costs where they are attributable to the purchaser).
- Data security protocols need to be considered if personal data is being shared.

NEW QUESTION # 105

In which of the following conditions, request for quotation produces the best results?

- A. Under a complex process
- B. With strategic items

- C. With an ambiguous specification
- D. Under framework agreements

Answer: D

Explanation:

Request for quotation has valuable function when its use is properly controlled. It works the best under framework agreements where the contract terms are already fixed.
