Cloud Security Alliance Certificate of Cloud Security Knowledge v5 (CCSKv5.0) Sample Questions (Q155-Q160):

NEW QUESTION # 155
What key characteristic differentiates cloud networks from traditional networks?

- A. Cloud networks rely on dedicated hardware appliances
- B. Cloud networks have the same architecture as traditional networks
- C. Cloud networks are software-defined networks (SDNs)
- D. Cloud networks are less scalable than traditional networks

Answer: C

Explanation:
The key characteristic that differentiates cloud networks from traditional networks is that cloud networks are often software-defined networks (SDNs). This means that network management, configuration, and provisioning in the cloud are handled through software, rather than relying on traditional hardware-based network components. SDNs allow for greater flexibility, scalability, and automation, enabling cloud providers to dynamically adjust resources to meet changing demands.

NEW QUESTION # 156

NEW QUESTION # 158
What does orchestration automate within a cloud environment?

- A. Provisioning of VMs, networking and other resources
- B. Monitoring application performance
- C. Installation of operating systems
- D. Manual configuration of security policies

Answer: A

Explanation:
In a cloud environment, orchestration automates the provisioning and management of various cloud resources, including virtual machines (VMs), networking, storage, and other infrastructure components. Cloud orchestration involves the use of software to coordinate and automate tasks that would otherwise require manual intervention, improving efficiency, scalability, and consistency across the environment.
Monitoring application performance is typically handled by monitoring tools, not orchestration. Manual configuration of security policies is something that can be automated through policy management but is not the focus of orchestration. Installation of operating systems is part of provisioning resources, but orchestration primarily focuses on automating the overall management of infrastructure and services, not just the installation of operating systems.
