What agile practice can help the team to alleviate this?

- A. Consistent team velocity
- B. Collaborative team planning games
- C. Test-driven development (TDD)
- D. Clear definition of done and regular demos

Answer: D

NEW QUESTION # 29

An agile team is building a training safety video based on current government regulations. The agile coach knows the regulations are likely to change before the release date.

How should the agile coach address this change?

- A. Verify the team is building the product in increments which can be adapted at the last minute if necessary.
- B. Monitor regulatory discussions to get a head start on the upcoming regulatory changes.
- C. Hold off making changes during the current release because the regulatory changes cannot be planned for.
- D. Plan for the second release to include regulatory changes and new features.

Answer: A

Explanation:

In Agile, flexibility and adaptability are key, especially when dealing with uncertain or changing requirements like evolving government regulations. The agile coach should ensure that the team is building the product incrementally, allowing for adjustments as needed. This way, when the regulatory changes occur, the team can adapt quickly without disrupting the entire release process. By focusing on delivering small, workable increments, the team can respond to changes more efficiently.
