NEW QUESTION # 44

As a Lead System Architect at a multinational corporation, you are tasked with addressing significant user-reported delays in a critical application. Suspecting that the delays are due to database-related issues that have arisen suddenly, you aim to identify and resolve the problem methodically. Which two options do you recommend to isolate the issue and enhance performance? (Choose Two)

- A. Raise the threshold for blob-size alerts to aid in the detection of large case instances that might impact performance.
- B. Analyze the periods during which the database experiences the highest usage, because this method assists in pinpointing the specific times to search for alerts or other issues in the log files.
- C. Configure the system to write Pega logs to the database server to gain insights into the events occurring within the application that might contribute to the delays.
- D. Reduce the thresholds for query-time alerts to more easily identify complex queries that might be causing delays.

Answer: B,D

Comprehensive and Detailed Explanation From Exact Extract:

Pega's troubleshooting and performance optimization techniques, as taught in Pega Academy's Troubleshooting Mission and the Pega Certified Lead System Architect Study Guide, focus on identifying bottlenecks using tools like alerts, logs, and performance analyzers. Database-related delays require targeted diagnostics to isolate and resolve issues efficiently.

* Option A (Correct): Reducing query-time alert thresholds (e.g., for DB-QUERY-TIME) helps identify slow or complex database queries that may cause delays. Pega's Alert Log and Performance Analyzer (PAL) use these thresholds to flag problematic queries, enabling targeted optimization, as documented in the Performance Troubleshooting module.

* Option B (Incorrect): Raising the threshold for blob-size alerts (e.g., BLOB-SIZE) would reduce sensitivity to large case instances, potentially missing performance issues. Lowering the threshold is more appropriate to detect oversized blobs, per the Database Performance guidelines.

* Option C (Correct): Analyzing high-usage periods helps pinpoint when database delays occur, allowing the LSA to correlate alerts, logs, and system metrics (e.g., via Log Analyzer or AES) to specific times. This is a standard troubleshooting approach, as outlined in the Troubleshooting Mission.

* Option D (Incorrect): Writing Pega logs to the database server is not recommended, as it increases database load and could exacerbate performance issues. Logs should be analyzed externally (e.g., via Pega Log Analyzer), per the Logging and Monitoring module.
