NEW QUESTION # 80

In which situations can you resume the failed recovery of your productive SAP HANA tenant database? Note: There are 2 correct answers to this question.

- A. An aborted recovery of a complete data backup
- B. An aborted recovery of a delta data backup
- C. An aborted recovery of a log backup
- D. An aborted recovery of the catalog backup

Answer: B,C

Explanation:

You can resume the failed recovery of your productive SAP HANA tenant database in the following situations:

* An aborted recovery of a delta data backup: Resuming from a delta backup is possible because these backups capture changes since the last full or another delta backup, allowing the recovery process to continue from the last successful point.

* An aborted recovery of a log backup: Log backups contain all the transactions since the last log or data backup. If the recovery from these backups is interrupted, it can be resumed because the log contains all necessary information to bring the database to a consistent state up to the point of failure.

References=SAP HANA backup and recovery documentation explains the mechanisms and capabilities of the database's recovery features, including scenarios where recovery processes can be resumed after interruption.

- B. To collect all the executed SQL statements and generate a searchable library list
- C. To execute scripts from the SQL statement collection for SAP HANA
- D. To determine special database information not available in the SAP HANA cockpit

Answer: A,C

Explanation:

The purpose of the statement library in the SAP HANA database explorer includes executing scripts from the SQL statement collection specifically curated for SAP HANA and sharing custom SQL scripts with the administration team. This allows administrators and developers to execute predefined, optimized SQL scripts that enhance performance and ensure best practices. Additionally, the feature to share custom scripts fosters collaboration and efficiency among the team by making frequently used or complex scripts readily available to all members.
