NEW QUESTION # 273

An organization is required to set a custom registry key on the guest operating system. Which of the following should the organization implement to facilitate this requirement?

- A. An operating system ACL
- B. A configuration management solution
- C. A log and event monitoring solution
- D. A file integrity check solution

Answer: B

Explanation:

A configuration management solution is a type of tool or system that automates and standardizes the configuration and deployment of cloud resources or services according to predefined policies or rules. A configuration management solution can help set a custom registry key on the guest operating system in an IaaS instance, as it can apply the desired registry setting to one or more virtual machines (VMs) without manual intervention or scripting. A configuration management solution can also help maintain consistency, compliance, and security of cloud configurations by monitoring and enforcing the desired state. NEW QUESTION # 274

An organization is hosting a cloud-based web server infrastructure that provides web-hosting solutions. Sudden continuous bursts of traffic have caused the web servers to saturate CPU and network utilizations. Which of the following should be implemented to prevent such disruptive traffic from reaching the web servers?

- A. DDoS protection
- B. QoS on the network
- C. A solution to achieve microsegmentation
- D. Solutions to perform NAC and DLP

Answer: A

Explanation:

Distributed denial-of-service (DDoS) protection is a type of security solution that detects and mitigates DDoS attacks that aim to overwhelm or disrupt a system or service by sending large volumes of traffic from multiple sources. DDoS protection can prevent such disruptive traffic from reaching the web servers by filtering out malicious or unwanted traffic and allowing only legitimate traffic to pass through. DDoS protection can also help maintain the availability and functionality of web services and applications during a DDoS attack.

NEW QUESTION # 275

A VDI administrator has received reports of poor application performance. Which of the following should the administrator troubleshoot FIRST?

- A. Client devices
- B. Container resources
- C. Server resources
- D. The network environment

Answer: D

Explanation:

The network environment is the set of network devices, connections, protocols, and configurations that enable communication and data transfer between different systems and applications. The network environment can affect the performance of a virtual desktop infrastructure (VDI) by influencing factors such as bandwidth, latency, jitter, packet loss, and congestion. Poor network performance can result in slow or unreliable application delivery, degraded user experience, and reduced productivity. Therefore, troubleshooting the network environment should be the first step for a VDI administrator who receives reports of poor application performance.

NEW QUESTION # 276

A cloud administrator has deployed a website and needs to improve the site security to meet requirements.

The website architecture is designed to have a DBaaS in the back end and autoscaling instances in the front end using a load balancer to distribute the request. Which of the following will the cloud administrator most likely use?

- A. An IPS/IDS
- B. An API gateway
- C. A reverse proxy
- D. A WAF

Answer: D

Explanation:

A web application firewall (WAF) is a security solution that monitors and filters the traffic between a web application and the Internet. A WAF can help improve the site security by blocking malicious requests, preventing SQL injection attacks, mitigating cross-site scripting (XSS) attacks, and enforcing security policies. A WAF can be deployed as a cloud service or as a device in front of the load balancer. A WAF is more suitable than an API gateway, an IPS/IDS, or a reverse proxy for the website architecture described in the question.
