NEW QUESTION # 188

A corporation acquires a startup company, with the objective of branching out into a new product line. The firm's procurement team needs to enlarge the supply base in order to meet the new production requirements.

Which of the following is the BEST way for the team to ensure suppliers are aligned with organizational goals?

- A. Contact current suppliers to determine their maximum production capacity at the necessary quality levels
- B. Compare the firm's vision and mission to potential suppliers' capabilities
- C. Facilitate meetings between internal stakeholders and external stakeholders
- D. Conduct market research to Identify characteristics needed by potential suppliers

Answer: B

Explanation:

To ensure suppliers are aligned with the organizational goals, it is essential to compare the suppliers' capabilities and vision with the firm's vision and mission.

* Contact current suppliers to determine their maximum production capacity at the necessary

* quality levels: Useful, but does not ensure alignment with organizational goals.

* Conduct market research to identify characteristics needed by potential suppliers: Important, but it should be followed by alignment checks.

* Facilitate meetings between internal stakeholders and external stakeholders: Valuable for communication but does not guarantee alignment.

* Compare the firm's vision and mission to potential suppliers' capabilities: This ensures that the suppliers can support and align with the strategic objectives of the firm, ensuring long-term compatibility and success.

Therefore, the best way to ensure suppliers are aligned with organizational goals is to compare the firm's vision and mission to potential suppliers' capabilities.

NEW QUESTION # 192

DEF, Inc. has a choice of several transportation providers in the immediate area. The firm decides to conduct a spend analysis to identify opportunities for cost savings through service standardization. In this situation, which of the following will be MOST Important for the company to analyze?

- A. Labor rates for frequently utilized locations
- B. Pricing at international locations
- C. Pricing for alternative travel modes such as rail and air
- D. Local laws and regulations regarding transportation

Answer: C

Explanation:

DEF, Inc. wants to conduct a spend analysis to identify opportunities for cost savings through service standardization. In this context: Option A, analyzing pricing for alternative travel modes such as rail and air, is crucial. Understanding the cost differences between various modes of transport can help DEF, Inc. identify the most cost-effective options and standardize services based on cost efficiency.

Option B, labor rates for frequently utilized locations, while important, is more relevant to operational costs rather than transportation cost savings.

Option C, local laws and regulations regarding transportation, is necessary for compliance but not directly related to cost savings through standardization.

Option D, pricing at international locations, is also important but might not provide the immediate opportunities for cost savings through standardization in the immediate area.

Therefore, analyzing pricing for alternative travel modes will offer the most significant insights for cost-saving opportunities.

References:

* Spend analysis methodologies in logistics.

* Research on cost-saving strategies through transportation mode comparison.
