CTS-D Exam Chapter 3

Design Development Phase - ✓✓ The goal of this design phase is to move beyond major coordination issues to basic floor plans. This is an intense period of design consulting and decision making for the design team and owner. The end result is the final architectural and engineering design.

Program Phase/ Briefing/ Concept Design - ✓✓ Discuss , clarify, and document client needs, constraints, and expectations.

Design Phase - ✓✓ In this phase we use the result of the program phase and program report to create specs and system documents.

Design Phase Specs - ✓✓ These documents describe functional, operational, and technical performance specs. May also provide information about equipment manufacturer, models, quantities, installation, and testing procedures.

Needs analysis and Program Report - ✓✓ What are the two components of the program phase?

Schematic Design Phase - ✓✓ More detailed level design phase, beginning to show doubles lines for walls, door locations, and room orientation. Architect defines overall "massing" of building.

Construction Phase - ✓✓ In this phase we turn design documents into construction drawings. These drawings are known as submittal, workshop, or shop drawings. This phase involves three efforts, coordination, procurement, and installation.

Verification Phase - ✓✓ After design documents have been handed off to the installation team you are responsible for insuring clients system is installed properly in this phase. AV Systems Performance Verification, offers a framework and set of processes for determining which elements of an AV system need to be verified.

AFF - ✓✓ Above Finished Floor
