Nutanix Certified Services Core Infrastructure Professional Sample Questions (Q271-Q276):

NEW QUESTION # 271

An administrator receives reports about a Nutanix environment. The investigation finds the following:

- * VMs are experiencing very high latency
- * Each node is equipped with a single SSD, utilized at 95%
- * Each node is equipped with three HDDs, utilized at 40%

Why are the guest VMs experiencing high latency?

- A. All VM read operations are coming from HDD.
- B. All VM write operations are going to HDD.
- C. VMs are unable to perform write operations.
- D. CVMs are overwhelmed by disk balancing operations.

Answer: A

Latency Variables in a Nutanix Cluster

The following points provide you with the information regarding latency on a Nutanix cluster.

- All-flash-array nodes are provided by Nutanix, but the focus of this KB is on the two-tier (SSD and HDD) nodes. This two-tier design aims to keep frequently read data in the host (SSD) tier and Information Life Cycle Management (ILM) promotes and demotes the data from the hot tier. This provides a cost-effective solution that has variable latency response.
- Extent store : HDD and SSD together makes the extent store. However some portion of the SSDs is used for Oolog.
- Oolog: This is used for random writes where data is temporarily written and provides quick acknowledgement. This is eventually drained to an extent store.
- Cluster that are correctly sized will have a Working Set Size (WSS) that fits within the SSD tier. This ensures that the commonly accessed data on the cluster is available from the SSD. If ILM is moving data from hot to cold tier and back, it implies that the cluster is under sized and higher latencies will be experienced due to the higher cold-tier hit rate for the data reads.

- Data that is read from the cold tier (HDD - spinning disk) will have higher latency than the data that is read from the hot tier.

NEW QUESTION # 272

Which Nutanix tool does the Field Installation Guide provide instructions for?

- A. Prism Central
- B. Foundation
- C. As-Built Generator
- D. Nutanix Move

Answer: B

Explanation:

The Nutanix Field Installation Guide primarily provides instructions for using Foundation. Foundation is the tool used for deploying, imaging, and configuring Nutanix nodes in a new installation or when expanding existing clusters. This tool is essential for setting up the Nutanix environment correctly and efficiently.
