NEW QUESTION # 46

A consultant is working with a client who wants to use a Flexcard to display data from a specific Salesforce object. The client is unsure which data source. What advice should the consultant give to the client?

- A. The client should choose a data source based on the speed of data retrieval
- B. The client should choose the data source that retrieves the most data.
- C. The client should choose a data source that can retrieve data from the specific Salesforce object.
- D. The client should choose a data source based on the number of records it can retrieve.

Answer: C

Explanation:

* A FlexCard retrieves data from a Salesforce object using a data source such as DataRaptor Extract, Integration Procedure, or a direct Salesforce Object Query.

* The correct approach is to choose a data source that specifically retrieves data from the required Salesforce object (D).

* This ensures relevant data is fetched efficiently while maintaining performance and scalability.

* A. Speed of data retrieval is important, but it depends on caching, data structure, and optimization-not just the data source itself.

* B. Retrieving the most data is not always efficient; performance and relevance of data are more important.

* C. While record limits matter, the primary consideration is whether the data source can retrieve the needed data from the required object.
