NEW QUESTION # 162

The volume of data from collecting log files from 50 Linux servers and 200 Windows servers will require multiple indexers. Following best practices, which types of Splunk component instances are needed?

- A. Indexers, search head, universal forwarders, license master
- B. Indexers, search head, deployment server, license master, universal forwarder, heavy forwarder
- C. Indexers, search head, deployment server, license master, universal forwarder
- D. Indexers, search head, deployment server, universal forwarders

Answer: C

Explanation:

Explanation

Indexers, search head, deployment server, license master, universal forwarder. This is the combination of Splunk component instances that are needed to handle the volume of data from collecting log files from 50 Linux servers and 200 Windows servers, following the best practices. The roles and functions of these components are:

- * Indexers: These are the Splunk instances that index the data and make it searchable. They also perform some data processing, such as timestamp extraction, line breaking, and field extraction. Multiple indexers can be clustered together to provide high availability, data replication, and load balancing.
- * Search head: This is the Splunk instance that coordinates the search across the indexers and merges the results from them. It also provides the user interface for searching, reporting, and dashboarding. A search head can also be clustered with other search heads to provide high availability, scalability, and load balancing.
- * Deployment server: This is the Splunk instance that manages the configuration and app deployment for
- * the universal forwarders. It allows the administrator to centrally control the inputs.conf, outputs.conf, and other configuration files for the forwarders, as well as distribute apps and updates to them
- * License master: This is the Splunk instance that manages the licensing for the entire Splunk deployment. It tracks the license usage of all the Splunk instances and enforces the license limits and violations. It also allows the administrator to add, remove, or change licenses.
- * Universal forwarder: These are the lightweight Splunk instances that collect data from various sources and forward it to the indexers or other forwarders. They do not index or parse the data, but only perform minimal processing, such as compression and encryption. They are installed on the Linux and Windows servers that generate the log files.

NEW QUESTION # 163

Event processing occurs at which phase of the data pipeline?

- A. Search
- B. Indexing
- C. Parsing
- D. Input

Answer: C

Explanation:

According to the Splunk documentation¹, event processing occurs at the parsing phase of the data pipeline. The parsing phase is where Splunk software processes incoming data into individual events, extracts timestamp information, assigns source types, and performs other tasks to make the data searchable¹. The parsing phase can also apply field extractions, event type matching, and other transformations to the events².
