Splunk Enterprise Certified Architect Sample Questions (Q73-Q78):

NEW QUESTION # 73

A new Splunk customer is using syslog to collect data from their network devices on port 514. What is the best practice for ingesting this data into Splunk?

- A. Use a Splunk forwarder to collect the input on port 514 and forward the data.
- B. Use a Splunk indexer to collect a network input on port 514 directly.
- C. Configure syslog to write logs and use a Splunk forwarder to collect the logs.
- D. Configure syslog to send the data to multiple Splunk indexers.

Answer: C

Explanation:

The best practice for ingesting syslog data from network devices on port 514 into Splunk is to configure syslog to write logs and use a Splunk forwarder to collect the logs. This practice will ensure that the data is reliably collected and forwarded to Splunk, without losing any data or overloading the Splunk indexer.

Configuring syslog to send the data to multiple Splunk indexers will not guarantee data reliability, as syslog is a UDP protocol that does not provide acknowledgment or delivery confirmation. Using a Splunk indexer to collect a network input on port 514 directly will not provide data reliability or load balancing, as the indexer may not be able to handle the incoming data volume or distribute it to other indexers. Using a Splunk forwarder to collect the input on port 514 and forward the data will not provide data reliability, as the forwarder may not be able to receive the data from syslog or buffer it in case of network issues. For more information, see [Get data from TCP and UDP ports] and [Best practices for syslog data] in the Splunk documentation.

NEW QUESTION # 74

- D. Replicated data does not count against licensing.

NEW QUESTION # 76

NEW QUESTION # 77

Other than high availability, which of the following is a benefit of search head clustering?

- A. Input settings are synchronized between search heads.
- B. Fewer network ports are required to be opened between search heads.
- C. Automatic replication of user knowledge objects.
- D. Allows indexers to maintain multiple searchable copies of all data.

Answer: C

Explanation:

According to the Splunk documentation<sup>1</sup>, one of the benefits of search head clustering is the automatic replication of user knowledge objects, such as dashboards, reports, alerts, and tags. This ensures that all cluster members have the same set of knowledge objects and can serve the same search results to the users.

The other options are false because:

- * Allowing indexers to maintain multiple searchable copies of all data is a benefit of indexer clustering, not search head clustering<sup>2</sup>.
- * Input settings are not synchronized between search heads, as search head clusters do not collect data from inputs. Data collection is done by forwarders or independent search heads<sup>3</sup>.
- * Fewer network ports are not required to be opened between search heads, as search head clusters use several ports for communication and replication among the members<sup>4</sup>.
