The genetic basis for acquired colistin resistance most commonly involves:

- A. Alterations in the outer membrane porin proteins, reducing colistin uptake.
- B. Production of enzymes that directly inactivate the colistin molecule.
- C. Mutations in genes encoding enzymes that modify the lipid A component of LPS.

- D. Acquisition of genes encoding efflux pumps that specifically target colistin.

Answer: C

NEW QUESTION # 174

Which of the following bacterial genera inherently possesses D-alanyl-D-lactate peptide subunits in its peptidoglycan precursors, conferring natural, high-level resistance to vancomycin?

In vitro studies demonstrate that the compound effectively inhibits the replication of a specific enveloped RNA virus. Further analysis reveals that the compound does not interfere with viral entry, genome replication, or protein synthesis. However, electron microscopy of infected cells treated with the compound shows an accumulation of viral glycoproteins within the endoplasmic reticulum and Golgi apparatus, with a significant reduction in the release of infectious virions. The MOST likely target of this antiviral compound is:

- A. Viral RNA-dependent RNA polymerase
- B. Host cell membrane fusion machinery
- C. Viral protease responsible for polyprotein cleavage
- D. Viral glycoprotein trafficking and maturation

Answer: D
