NEW QUESTION # 39

Is this statement true about the IdentityNow release cycle?

Solution: IdentityNow releases are controlled and coordinated by SailPoint.

- A. No
- B. Yes

Answer: B

Explanation:

Yes, IdentityNow releases are controlled and coordinated by SailPoint. SailPoint manages the software release cycle for IdentityNow, which follows a SaaS (Software-as-a-Service) delivery model.

This means updates, new features, patches, and other improvements are automatically rolled out by SailPoint without requiring manual intervention by customers. The release schedule is typically structured around planned maintenance windows and communicated to customers in advance.

SailPoint ensures these updates are deployed securely and efficiently to all tenants.

NEW QUESTION # 40

The customer has a system that matches the following description. Is this a suitable connector type to use?

The system is a modern, cloud-based, web application that uses a MySQL database backend provided by the cloud platform. The database is only accessible from the web application. The web application exposes a fully compliant SCIM 2.0 interface with OAuth 2.0 client credentials.

Solution: Generic Cloud Connector

- A. No
- B. Yes

Answer: A

Explanation:

No, the Generic Cloud Connector is not the most suitable connector type for this use case. The system described is a modern, cloud-based web application that exposes a SCIM 2.0 interface with OAuth 2.0 client credentials for authentication. The Generic Cloud Connector is typically used for systems that do not have specialized connectors but can integrate via general APIs or REST endpoints. Since the application supports SCIM 2.0, which is a standardized protocol for managing identities, the SCIM 2.0 Connector would be the more appropriate choice, as it is specifically designed for this type of integration.

NEW QUESTION # 41

Does this example accurately describe an IdentityNow data flow?

Solution:

1. The IdentityNow engineer logs into the virtual appliance and creates a new identity profile.
2. The virtual appliance contacts the IdentityNow tenant to synchronize the identity profile.
3. The IdentityNow tenant provisions accounts to source systems.
4. The IdentityNow tenant sends an API call to the virtual appliance with confirmation that accounts were provisioned

- A. No
- B. Yes

Answer: A

Explanation:

No, this example does not accurately describe an IdentityNow data flow. The incorrect part of this flow is that identity profiles are not created within the Virtual Appliance (VA). Identity profiles are created and managed directly within the IdentityNow tenant, not the VA. Additionally, the provisioning process is handled by the IdentityNow tenant through provisioning tasks and API calls to the VA for execution, but the VA does not initiate identity profile creation or manage the full synchronization of those profiles.

NEW QUESTION # 42

An IdentityNow engineer has set up an access profile for an application. The access profile allows for users to request access, and for a user's manager to approve or deny access.

After a recent staff meeting, management has expressed that they want to remove any approval requirements for this application. Is management's request possible in IdentityNow, and, if so, are these the recommended steps the engineer should take to meet their new requirement?

Solution: It is possible. Delete the access profile.

- A. No
- B. Yes

Answer: A

Explanation:

No, deleting the access profile is not the correct way to meet the requirement of removing approval for access requests. The access profile defines the entitlements and permissions that users can request for an application. Deleting it would remove the entire ability to request access, rather than just removing the approval workflow. The correct step would be to modify the approval settings in the access profile (as explained in Question 44), not to delete it.

Key Reference from SailPoint Documentation:

Access Profile Management: Modifying approval settings in the access profile is the appropriate step to meet management's new requirement, not deleting the profile itself.

NEW QUESTION # 43

Does the following use case correctly describe passthrough authentication?

Solution: A user logs into IdentityNow via an identity provider's login. The identity provider exchanges information via federation.

- A. No
- B. Yes

Answer: B

Explanation:

The use case describes a user logging into IdentityNow via an external identity provider's login, where information is exchanged via federation. This correctly aligns with the concept of passthrough authentication.

Passthrough authentication often uses protocols like SAML (Security Assertion Markup Language) or OAuth for federation. In this case, the identity provider (IdP) handles the authentication and then passes the necessary authentication tokens or assertions back to SailPoint IdentityNow, granting the user access without directly requiring their password to be stored or authenticated by IdentityNow.

This is a typical use case of federation and passthrough authentication.
