NEW QUESTION # 30

When doing a site survey, it is MOST IMPORTANT to consider the client's

- A. knowledge of technology.
- B. expectations.
- C. timeline.
- D. budget.

Answer: B

Explanation:

When conducting a site survey, understanding and considering the client's expectations is paramount. This involves determining what the client hopes to achieve with the installation, their specific requirements, and any particular preferences they may have. By aligning the survey with the client's expectations, the surveyor can ensure that the final installation meets or exceeds the client's needs and satisfaction. This principle is well-documented in project management and client relations literature, emphasizing the importance of clear communication and understanding of client objectives at the onset of a project.
